BACKGROUND ON INDIAN TRUST FUNDS In 1869 an amendment to the Indian Act moved the Indian Trust Funds to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. The trust funds were no longer held separately from general Canadian Funds. The funds came from leases, royalties, rental, loans to non-natives, revenues from natural resources of the land, which could not be sold, from mining of gold, silver, diamonds, hydro-electricity. Laws were passed to turn natives into “wards” of the state with no rights over their funds and lives. The government designated new status and registration rules to increase control of indigenous life and monies and to eventually erase reference to the existence of natives. Indian Funds became connected to government designated status and band membership instead of monies to descendants of traditional people of the land. The following MNN articles are about how penniless intruders set up the theft of indigenous possessions and carried out the genocide of the original peoples to create the colony of Canada.
